I am a British Jamaican writer and filmmaker and recent graduate of the Screen and Film School in Brighton. Whilst studying for my degree, I have been able to work alongside young black British writers and filmmakers and was mentored by Kashman Harris and Max Goldini. The creator of Wall of Comedy, Dr Freddie Osborne, taught me how to approach an idea and gave me some unforgettable advice. Percelle Ascott, at the Wall of Production, gave me an insight into the workings of a professional set. I've spent some time travelling and, whilst in Vietnam I have been developing an independent project. I find it easy to connect with new people and this has been invaluable whilst looking for work as well as hunting out great stories. I want to write for television. My passion for writing started at my local comprehensive school where I wrote my first comedy, followed by several urban drama scripts. I believe my continuing life experience, beginning with the Whitehawk Estate in Brighton will enable me to develop interesting and exciting ideas, alongside the practicality of adding a pen to paper.
