Resume / C.V:

October 2020

I'm a white male, 50, I live in the most beautiful country of South Africa. By trade, I'm an electronics technician. By passion, I'm a screenwriter. As an avid movie lover and having somewhat of a conceptual imagination. After reading a feature script for the first time, I was hooked! The concept / format of showing a story I can be part of, and not told of... I now had a format in which I could write my stories. Why screenwriting and not story writing books? - Hereto is a copy / paste of the introduction page to a book I wrote and published. MOVIE SCRIPTS. A collection of short movie scripts.

A novelist and a screenwriter will give you the same story.

Novelists write books. They TELL stories. They can, and are expected to, go into detail while describing the atmosphere, characters, environment, locations, etc. They can go on for pages and ages doing so.

Screenwriters write movie scripts. They SHOW you a story that they put you into. They write giving you the basics to understand the story. They tell the story in the shortest amount of words. The rest is your imagination... Which it should be.

I am five years into screenwriting, and have written a good few quality scripts. A part from all the books and self study courses, I owe my skill-set largely to the many screenwriting forums I'm a member of. Of which I now pay it forward to new screenwriters. I'm a big fan of the "discussion lounges". Where else can you have a cup of coffee with a few thousand other screenwriters.

A quote I like to share: A writer must have hunger. Full stop! You must have a total Hunger!!! A physical and mental hunger. Your soul must be racked with hunger. Your body must cry out for food. Then you create! Then you soar into the sky. Then you touch the magic. Then your soul explodes... Then your words flow like vintage wine staining damask cloth into a dark purple of greatness...
